Program Description: Risk management is a necessity of mental health practice and this requires a thoughtful approach to suicide risk assessment and management. Problem-Solving Therapy (PST), recently revised and renamed Emotion-Centered PST, is an evidenced-based psychosocial intervention found to be effective for a wide range of client populations and psychological problems. However, an accumulating body of evidence indicates that suicide risk screening and follow up evaluation are critical components of effective, patient-centered suicide risk management. This virtual knowledge-based webinar training will examine the relevance of EC-PST as a treatment and prevention approach for healthcare teams and clinical professionals to reduce suicidality. A conceptual problem-solving model of suicide in addition to various clinical guidelines will be presented.
