Veterans indicated that public health campaigns can be effective interventions during periods of crisis. Our findings highlight opportunities to inform campaign development targeting Veterans at high risk for suicide.

Main point of messages was discernible; however, actionable steps (crisis line use) were not clearly communicated, potentially preventing messages from increasing help seeking behaviors.

Participants did not regularly perceive themselves as targets for messages despite content developed towards populations at high risk for suicide.

Veterans indicated that public health campaigns can be effective interventions during periods of crisis. Our findings highlight opportunities to inform campaign development targeting Veterans at high risk for suicide.

Main point of messages was discernible; however, actionable steps (crisis line use) were not clearly communicated, potentially preventing messages from increasing help seeking behaviors.

Participants did not regularly perceive themselves as targets for messages despite content developed towards populations at high risk for suicide.

Veterans indicated that public health campaigns can be effective interventions during periods of crisis. Our findings highlight opportunities to inform campaign development targeting Veterans at high risk for suicide.

Main point of messages was discernible; however, actionable steps (crisis line use) were not clearly communicated, potentially preventing messages from increasing help seeking behaviors.

Participants did not regularly perceive themselves as targets for messages despite content developed towards populations at high risk for suicide.